Chie Fueki, Visiting Artist Lecture Series

November 12, 2015
4:30 pm
Art Annex, Room 107

“Chie Fueki’s work may in part reflect her own history. Born in Yokohama, Japan, she was raised in São Paulo, Brazil, earned an MFA from Yale, and now lives in Brooklyn. Fueki's paintings are embellished with bright dots of color, recalling appliquéd textiles or jewel boxes. These shimmering fields give the works a sensuous, intoxicating delight of the sort more often associated with decoration than with thoughtful contemporary painting. Under the bejeweled surfaces, though, lurk traditional landscape motifs, doubled and redoubled, suggesting Rorschach tests or the ambiguously infinite view in a hall of mirrors.” - Laura Newman, Bomb Magazine 2002

From surveillance to arrest, the three artists shine a light on controversial government practices that often remain hidden, unseen, or forgotten.

One of the earliest toys devised for children, baby rattles have evolved over the centuries into a variety of shapes and sizes. They are symbolic of how design responds to socio-economic factors and cultural identity, and represent a design chronology of style, function, sound and materials. This exhibition features over 100 rattles from the important collection of Lu and Maynard Lyndon, the founders and owners of Placewares+LyndonDesign in Gualala, California.

Lecture Review: Zhang Wenjun, The Mud Children of Song Dynasty Jiangnan

On October 20th, visiting Scholar Zhang Wenjun, Associate Professor of Humanities at Nanjing University of the Arts, presented her current research on the numerous representations of children in the Jiangnan region during the Song Dynasty. Wenjun argued that a population decline during the Song Dynasty, combined with a desire to have more children in order to preserve one’s legacy and increase one’s prosperity, contributed to the abundance of these figures. This popular theme of children continued into the Ming-Qing Dynasties when Da a fu figures, representations of children symbolizing longevity and values of the time, appeared. —Renata McRee, M.A. Candidate 2017
